2014 Statistics

The below statistics include information from the calls, emails, and webforms received by the National Human Trafficking Resource Center hotline (available at trafficking resource center.org/statistics); from texts received by Polaris's BeFree texting helpline; and from communications referencing overseas cases. Through these communications, Polaris has learned of, responded to, and analyzed thousands of cases of human trafficking. The data are not intended to represent the full scope of human trafficking, but to help identify trends. Statistics on this page are from Jan. 1, 2014 to Dec. 31, 2014.

Eve contacted the Polaris BeFree texting helpline from a hotel room in an unfamiliar city. Eve had been under the control of a very violent pimp who had just threatened to hurt her if she did not meet her quota by the end of the evening. One of our BeFree texting specialists spoke with Eve through text message over the course of several hours, listening as she shared her fears for her safety.

Once Eve said she felt comfortable receiving assistance from law enforcement, we immediately coordinated a plan to help Eve leave. We also made sure to connect Eve with a local service provider who was able to provide her with immediate services. Now, Eve is home with her family and getting the help she needs—and she's interested in helping other victims or individuals at risk in her hometown.

*The National Human Trafficking Resource Center hotline is funded by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services and operated by Polaris.

"Human trafficking survivors need hotlines to access the services they need to get help and stay safe. But hotlines also provide crucial data that help us learn where and how traffickers operate so that we can shut them down and keep them from harming more people."
